FALL WINTER 2013/2014 COLLECTION

Our fathers have told us

Education is the best provision for old age.

Aristotle (4th century B.C.)

[...] and thou didst put it into my mind, and it seemed good in my own sight, to go to Simplicianus, who appeared to me a faithful servant of thine, and thy grace shone forth in him. I had also been told that from his youth up he had lived in entire devotion to thee. He was already an old man, and because of his great age, which he had passed in such a zealous discipleship in thy way, he appeared to me likely to have gained much wisdom – and, indeed, he had. From all his experience, I desired him to tell me – setting before him all my agitations – which would be the most fitting way for one who felt as I did to walk in thy way.

Augustine, Confessions (4th-5th century A.D.)

WISDOM AND AGE

In every corner of the world, Old Age is sometimes seen as a large silent population.

Its members are – like all other people – contradictory.

They remind us of large trees. The bark of those ancient plants is craggy.

Inside, their sap flows more slowly. A few leaves farther from the trunk wither, and a few small roots no longer strongly grip the ground as in the past.

These old trees are often considered hazardous and are chopped down.

Afterwards, if we carefully look at their series of rings, we can determine their venerable age and appreciate the effort and joy of living so long. But other old trees, with their long lives and immense crowns, are spared and continue to give us oxygen, again and again, for who knows how much longer. With their great dimension, they warn us of the importance of history. The same happens with elderly people.

This group is composed of women and men who are outwardly gruff at times, which is how they protect themselves when they feel weak. They are often gloomy, when they are set aside and abandoned, and they are sometimes absent when they are left alone.

Their life passes more slowly, but their soul perceives good and evil as much or perhaps even more than everyone else. And if they are loved, they will be ready to explain the how and why of everything that we sense by observing the wrinkles on their faces.

Delight in them is nearer the mark than dislike. For just as old men, if they are wise, take pleasure in the society of young men of good parts, and as old age is rendered less dreary for those who are courted and liked by the youth, so also do young men find pleasure in the maxims of the old, by which they are drawn to the pursuit of excellence. Nor do I perceive that you find my society less pleasant than I do yours. But this is enough to show you how, so far from being listless and sluggish, old age is even a busy time, always doing and attempting something, [...] Shall we not allow old age even the strength to teach the young, to train and equip them for all the duties of life? And what can be a nobler employment? [...] Xenophon's Cyrus, for instance, [in the Cyropedia in which he narrated the triumphs of Cyrus the Great, King of the Persians], in his discourse delivered on his death-bed and at a very advanced age, says that he never perceived his old age to have become weaker than his youth had been. I remember as a boy Lucius Metellus, who, having been created Pontifex Maximus four years after his second consulship, held that office twenty-two years, enjoying such excellent strength of body in the very last hours of his life as not to miss his youth.

Cicero, De Senectute, paragraphs 26, 29, 30 (1st century B.C.)

*When forty winters shall besiege thy brow,
and dig deep trenches in thy beauty's field,
thy youth's proud livery, so gazed on now,
will be a tatter'd weed, of small worth held:
then being ask'd where all thy beauty lies,
where all the treasure of thy lusty days,
to say, within thine own deep-sunken eyes,
were an all-eating shame and thriftless praise.
How much more praise deserved thy beauty's use,
if thou couldst answer "This fair child of mine shall sum my count and make my old excuse," proving his beauty by succession thine!
This were to be new made when thou art old,
and see thy blood warm when thou feel'st it cold.*

William Shakespeare, Sonnets (1609)

They forget things that happened just yesterday, but they lucidly remember events from many years ago. For them, bygone days are all wonderful, even when times were difficult and full of bitterness. Those distant youthful years full of light, colors, fragrances, flavors, sentiments, strength, love, and breathless activity vanished too soon and ended so suddenly, when there was still so much to be done, and now that time is over and many things will remain unfinished. They would like to speak about this, but they almost never find someone to listen.

And yet, we should listen to these women and men.

Their stories are all fascinating and captivating, without exception.

We must encourage their words and listen to them in silence, for as long as they want, just as you do with the most beautiful music and with the song of nature in a large forest full of century-old trees. We must listen to them for their – and for our – good.

Then we will see that the words start flowing quicker and with them, our imagination will slowly form a story – their story – the story of the world, a universal story that echoes in those particular narratives.

Gradually, like the grass in spring, the vital fabric that connects us to them materializes.

If we listen to them carefully, we can understand the significance and learn.

But if we are too stressed by our daily lives, we will not understand their language and the meaning of their lives, past and present.

They still fervently want to live what remains of their life, but they cannot do it alone.

As in a magnificent theater piece on stage, the people, names, nicknames, humor, habits, courageous actions, games, tears, laughter, births, deaths, wars,

Old age is full of joy because it frees the mind without violating moral law.

from Confucius, thoughts

Laelius and Scipio, [...] I have less strength than either of you. [...] The course of life is fixed, and nature admits of its being run but in one way, and only once; and to each part of our life there is something specially seasonable; so that the feebleness of children, as well as the high spirit of youth, the soberness of maturer years, and the ripe wisdom of old age – all have a certain natural advantage which should be secured in its proper season. [...] Bodily strength is wanting to old age; [...] Active exercise, therefore, and temperance can preserve some part of one's former strength even in old age. [...] Young men are more frequently wanton and dissolute than old men; but yet, as it is not all young men that are so, but the bad set among them, even so senile folly – usually called imbecility – applies to old men of unsound character, not to all. [...] In fact, old age, especially when it has enjoyed honours, has an influence worth all the pleasures of youth put together.

and past hunger of these women and men and many other people who lived with them unfold before by our eyes. We can physically see the things they speak about, we sentimentally participate in those events, and we always learn because their profound wisdom does not derive from the culture of the narrator, but from his or her long life.

And we are amazed to learn that a dish of broad bean skins poorly cooked during the war and seasoned only with fear tasted better than today's refined food; that playing with little cardboard soldiers blown by the wind off the terrace of an old city apartment can be more entertaining than a modern videogame; that there was a time not so long ago when you had to go to the river to do the laundry and then carry the wet clothes back home; and that the tears shed during punishment for mischievous behavior were dried by the joy deriving from that prank. So then, what is Old Age?

It is a concept that mainly concerns the spirit. If our spirit remains young, preserving its dreams and ability to still be enthused about things, we will never age.

Old Age wears different clothes. Let's help those who are unable to preserve beautiful things and ideals within their hearts. This is the only way for the elderly to open up and prepare to tell us what we want to hear. In every society in which the elderly were young at heart, the two different generations established a dialog and were better than others.

*This is the precious meaning of Old Age, and as John Ruskin said,
"Our fathers have told us."*

WOMEN'S COLLECTION FALL WINTER 2013/2014

EVERYDAY COUTURE

The essence of femininity is expressed through striking shapes, sculptural elements, cuts, and volumes. Haute couture techniques combined with different materials and textures create three-dimensional effects and lines yet preserve lightness and volume, luxuriously alternating the fluid female universe of silk crepe and satin and the sartorial world of menswear wool and flannel.

The collection opens with deep, dark shades ranging from coppery browns like beaver and fox to lignite and anthracite gray, from moss and forest green to wintery blues, alternating with luminous touches of white and vanilla with speckles and a metallic gleam that create a graphic effect.

Sleek shapes and geometric cuts are the choice for the blazer coats, tuxedo jackets, A-line skirts, and pea coats made of jersey, impalpable flannel and satin wool, sometimes stiffened with neoprene for an ultra-light "scuba" effect, creating silhouettes that ensure full freedom of movement.

The wardrobe expresses relaxed elegance that is perfect for any occasion, day or night.

MEN'S COLLECTION FALL WINTER 2013/2014

A MELTING POT OF CULTURES AND SENSATIONS

The collection reveals its profound Italian roots as it travels across Europe, looking to reinterpret moods and going beyond the borders of the Old World in search of new inspiration and unusual combinations.

Many prints are reminiscent of the typical fabrics used by great British tailors: houndstooth check, Prince of Wales check, pied de poule, madras, and windowpane check in green, red or indigo blue that blend so perfectly that, at a distance, they appear to be a solid color.

An Italian artisan approach combines light fabrics and deconstructed yet well-tailored styles so easy to wear that they are almost like shirts.
